Science says some spiders can launch into the sky using silk and electricity to fly and the physics is wild

A spider standing on a plant, raising its abdomen and releasing several strands of silk may look like it is simply being carried away by the wind. But the physics of this strange behavior, known as ballooning, is more complicated.

Feedback

Some spiders can become airborne using extremely fine silk threads, and researchers have found evidence that Earth's atmospheric electric field may

Preparing for doomsday is hardly a new obsession. From Hollywood blockbusters to ancient prophecies, the idea of an apocalyptic event has always captured the human imagination. Yet today, it's not just conspiracy theorists who are stockpiling supplies. Across the globe, some of the wealthiest individuals are secretly investing in underground bunkers, fortified compounds, and remote safe havens.

What exactly are they preparing for? Is it the instability of global markets, escalating geopolitical tensions, climate disaster, or the rise of uncontrollable artificial intelligence? No one knows for certain. But one thing is clear: the elite are planning for scenarios that most people would rather not imagine.

In this gallery, we explore why the superrich might be bracing for the worst. Curious? Click to know more.
